SOCIALISM AND M. O.

Socialists Regard Municipal Ownership as a Step In the Right Direction.

At the recent labor conference at-Hull, England, a resolution was adopted to the effect that "socialism is the definite object of the Labor party." This party has steadily favored municipal ownership, but until this year has been unwilling to take the next and logical step of indorsing socialism. This action just taken is helpful to a clearer understanding of the relation between the two movements. Socialism stands for the collective ownership of all the means of production; municipal ownership stands for the collective ownership of a part of the means of production. The difference is one of degree, not of kind, and in Great Britain no logical line of demarcation between the two has been

In this country, too, the Socialist is making full use of municipal ownership. He well knows that many people will take tickets for a short ride who would be frightened away if urged to buy a through ticket. The main point is to get them stanted toward his ultimate goal. After a man has been enlisted in favor of municipal ownership it is comparatively easy to get him to accept the principle of public ownership of railroads, telegraphs and coal mines, although he may still not be ready to accept the whole Socialist programme, collective ownership of all the means of production, for the simple reason that he is apt to be an owner or part owner of some "means of production" himself-e. g., a shop or a store or a share or two of stock in a manufacturing plant. That is why the national platform of the Socialist party is discreetly silent on some of the cardinal doctrines of socialism. The real purpose of collective ownership of all the means of production is therefore toned down to a demand for-

"The collective ownership of railroads, telegraphs, telephones, steamship lines and all other means of transportation and communication and

"The collective ownership of all industries which are organized on a national scale and in which competition has virtually ceased to exist.

"The extension of the public domain to include mines, quarries, oil wells, forests and water power."

The platform is silent about municipal ownership of lighting plants and waterworks because M. O. people are attending to that part of the Socialist programme, leaving the thoroughgoing Socialist free to concentrate his efforts on the second part of the programme as outlined above. It may look enticing, but remember that socialism doesn't intend to stop with public utilities and big corporations nor until it has swallowed up in the great state machine every vestige of private ownership of everything except what a man wears on his back or needs to furnish his home.

A SEARCHING ANALYSIS.

Municipal Ownership Beautiful In Theory, but Practically a Bid For Political Graft.

Experience has proved that the agitation for municipal ownership is usually in charge of a group of men who are looking for personal profit. When the plant or plants finally get under municipal control these men are virtually the proprietors. They dictate who shall have positions, and they usually see to it that they receive a good return in either the coin of the realm or something else of value for every position they give out. They are intent upon squeezing every dollar they can out of the plant.

Where a company or the individual gives much attention to the minutiae of a plant, the saving of a few pennies or there, under municipal control the

But it is politics and not attention to duty and positions, so they give more attention Louisville State Fair.

The management of the plant usually devolves upon a committee of the town council. Right here is where the graft bacteria gets loose and begins to cause havoc. Some men will stand for election to council with no other thought in view than getting their bands on the light plant. They have some favorites they wish to place in office, and they likewise have a plan whereby they can squeeze the business so that many golden drops will property on the "Point," West Forest avenue. fall into their own pockets.
